The following is a consumer recommendation:

I started using this product almost a year ago after Kelsi had a regular teeth cleaning. It was recommended to me by a friend. Being a bit skeptical as well as worried about side effects, I first asked my Board Certified Dental Veterinarian her opinion. She offered to look into this product for me. She talked with the company itself and investigated the ingredients. She found that it was a reputable product and the ingredients were safe.

Personally, I have only good things to say about this product. It is so easy to use – simply sprinkle a very small amount of the granule like substance onto their food. I give it Kelsi her with her evening meal.

Kelsi's teeth have remained very clean and tarter free. My friend, who started her BC on it without first having a dental cleaning has also had good results.

I really like this product and wanted to share with the club.

Keep Your Dog's Drive Alive

“My dog doesn’t want to play with me!” “He simply isn’t food motivated!”
 “My dog’s favorite reward is playing with other dogs!” “I think my dog has ADD!”

Just a few of the many exclamations you might hear from exasperated dog owners who can’t seem to get their dog to want to work. There is often a single underlying thread that ties these dog-to-owner relationship issues together - a lack of work ethic.

A work ethic isn’t a natural drive or instinct that compels our dogs. Dogs aren’t born with engagement and focus. It isn’t a natural personality trait. On the contrary, it must be shaped and maintained....and it’s our job to do it.

We want our dogs to be engaged, willing, and focused on us, not the butterflies flitting through the yard or the occasional dog that passes by. But if we fail to establish this enthusiasm in advance, teaching basic behaviors will likely become an exercise in frustration.

You need to bring the passion and enthusiasm to your training if you want it from your dog in return. If you want to give your dog’s work ethic a boost, here are some things to keep in mind.

Be present – Turn off your cell phone, get focused, and engage with your dog. If you put in what you expect to get out of your dog, you’ll see tremendous results.

Don’t allow disengagement – If your dog starts to lose focus, change the game, increase your enthusiasm, and win his focus back. This means you can’t disengage either. So make the commitment to stay focused during your entire session.

Don’t let your dog engage with dogs or people during training, and don’t engage with other dogs or people during training yourself unless absolutely necessary.

Don’t let your trainer pull your focus – If you have to stop to talk with your trainer, do so after your work is finished – not in between behaviors. Or, put your dog up, or ask him for a down stay while you stop to chat. Don’t let your dog chase butterflies or totally check out.

Put your dog on a leash – Prevention is key. If you don’t want your dog to disengage and wander off to find all sorts of awesome rewards in the environment, a leash will help prevent it.

Every time your dog finds and engages with something better than you, you can bet he’s going to remember it and it’s going to pull his focus the next time it comes around. He’ll find those awesome rewards like good smells, other dogs, and friendly people when he’s off leash, or when you aren’t paying attention.

If you want your dog to focus and commit, you have to focus and commit too. Remember that you really can’t expect your dog to give you things you aren’t willing to give him in return. Stay in the moment and Happy Training!
